

“Slow Down Everyne; You’re Moving Too Fast”

A s p r i n g b r e a k p o t o f e a t u r e

The pace on Kauai is even slower than many of the islands in Hawaii. A good portion of the island is still agricultural as well as natural habitat with empty streams and green jungle trails. The south shore is the center for most the largest pockets of resorts and outside of the Beach House Restaurant in Poipu Beach (below) everyone finds the time to watch the sun go down. If an endangered monk seal wants to rest on the sand, local officials close off the beach.

(Clockwise from left) Taking a rest on the Na’apali Coast trail affords the lucky hiker unforgettable views as the trail snakes in and out of the canyons. Nature’s own restoration in Haleiwa, north shore of Oahu.

Finding beauty in the abandoned; Forgotten buildings find new life (right, below right)

